Dear Parents,

Let's Celebrate World Book Day with "The Day the Crayons Quit"!

As you may know, World Book Day, Thursday 7th March, is fast approaching, and at Hanbury's Farm and Oakhill Primary School Federation we are thrilled to celebrate the joy of reading with our pupils. This year, we have chosen a delightful book, "The Day the Crayons Quit" by Drew Daywalt, as the forefront of our celebration.

In line with the theme of the book, we would like to invite all of our pupils to participate in a fun and colourful activity – dressing up as colours! We believe that dressing up as colours from the book will not only add an element of excitement to the day, but also bring the story to life for the children.

Encourage your child to choose a colour from the book, red, blue, green, yellow and dress up accordingly. They can get creative with their costumes, whether it's wearing clothing in that colour or even creating homemade costumes related to it.

All of the children will be involved in various activities, related to the text, throughout the day. These activities will include reading sessions, discussions about the themes in the text, and art activities inspired by the story.

Thank you for your continued support, we look forward to seeing all the colourful characters on World Book Day!
